

Dr Judith Bulmer is a Senior Lecturer and Consultant Gynaecological Pathologist in Newcastle University, UK. She has a long standing research interest in human endometrial leucocyte populations and in particular in the interactions between maternal decidual leucocytes and trophoblast cells in human pregnancy. Her particular interest in uterine natural killer cells started during her PhD studies and continues until the present time.